TO-DAY IN HISTORY.

The Marshal Niel Rose—October 4.

To-day is the birthday in 1802 of Marshal Niel, the distinguished soldier of France, the commander for whom the Marshal Niel rose was named. In 1859, when the French army was in Italy, Niel commanded the Third Army Corps, and at Magenta and Solferino he did such brilliant service that when peace was declared at Paris he was created Marshal of France. His service for his country was so brilliant and so successful that in 1867 he was made French minister of war, in which capacity he was serving when he died at Paris on August 13, 1895.

In all the successes of the life of the French soldier he never forgot the incident which gave his name to the now famous rose. It was a touch of romance that appealed to his Irish nature and intensified his devotion to his empire. The incident is as follows:

When the army went back to France from Italy Niel was obliged to remain in the latter country, for in addition to many bad wounds he had suffered much from fever. He had a long and serious illness, and excessive weakness followed. His recovery was slow, but he had carefully devoted service from an Italian peasant woman.

This patient nurse brought him one day a basket of lovely roses from the campagna. The sick man particularly loved roses, and had never seen this lovely variety. When they had faded and he was obliged to throw them away, he noticed among the withered stems and leaves a green shoot of several inches in length. Wondering why this had flourished, he discovered that a bit of root had been cut away with the flower stem.

This small incident in his sick room made a happy impression, and he decided to send the root to France and have it cultivated. The campagna rose was of single leaf, and in color a pale yellow.

According to his direction the rose slip was carefully planted and the next spring four exquisite buds, of pale lemon tint appeared upon the rose bush. When the time came that Niel was to be decorated with the cross of the Legion of Honor and made a marshal of France he presented the beautiful Empress Eugenie with a singularly perfect and fragrant yellow rose, the like of which she had never seen.

When he told her the story of this little plant she was intensely interested, and said to him: "I shall christen this rose for you, M. le Marechal."

This little scene took place during a reception at the Tuilleries. Marshal Niel was one of the handsomest men in France, and had the courtly manners of his race. His family was one of noble blood that emigrated from Ireland to France after the death of Charles I. The marshal bowed profoundly to his empress and gave her a glowing look of thanks, in which admiration for her beauty played a large part.

Eugenie raised the rose to her lips and lightly touched them with it, saying: "It is named the Marshal Niel, for the soldier sows and sows reproach, as gallant in the salon as he is on the battlefield."

The heart of the Irish soldier was deeply touched, and it is said that he ventured to ask the empress to wear the rose on the evening, and then allow him to have it forever.

A story was also told by the marshal's chief of staff that four days after this reception he saw Marshal Niel take a rose out of an envelope just delivered to him, and when he thought no one was looking he locked it carefully in a private drawer of his desk.

On October 4, 1777 was fought the battle of Germantown. To-day is the birthday of Richard Cromwell (1626); Samuel Langhorne, author and traveler (1780); Francois Guizot, the French historian (1787); Jean Francois Millet, celebrated painter (1814); Rutherford B. Hayes, nineteenth President of the United States (1822); William Gilpin, the Colorado statesman (1822); and James E. Garretson, physician and author (1828). To-day is the date of the death of St. Francis (1226); John, Duke of Argyll, statesman and general (1743); and Henry Carey, the composer (1743).

Their home in Washington is one of the most interesting of the historic residences, and is known as the "Decatur" house, for it was Commodore Decatur's home for many years.

Miss Ethel Barksdale Shaffer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Henry Shaffer, of North Chevy Chase, Md., and Allen Warren Pease, of New York, were married yesterday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock at All Saints Church, Chevy Chase. A small gathering of relatives and intimate friends attended the ceremony, which was performed by Rev. Richard Pardee Williams, rector of Trinity Episcopal Church. The church was tastefully decorated with autumn foliage, golden-rod and yellow chrysanthemums. The bride, who was escorted and given in marriage by her father, was gowned in ivory satin trimmed with chiffon and rose point lace, with a tall veil caught with a cluster of orange blossoms. She carried a shower of bride roses and lilies of the valley. Dr. Harry A. Peyton and Richard J. Fonden attended the bridegroom as usher and groomsmen. The bride was unattended. The vested choir of the church sang the bridal chorus from "Lohengrin" for the entrance of the bride and party and during the ceremony "O Perfect Love." Following the ceremony a small reception for the families was held at the home of the bride's parents, and later the young people left for a short bridal trip and their future home in New York. ## NIGHT SCHOOLS OPEN

Nearly 4,000 Attend Classes This Year.

MANY FOREIGNERS ON HAND

First Night of the New Term at Lincicum Institute, Which Was Founded by Georgetown Philanthropist, Proves Most Auspicious Here—Object of the Board.

Approximately 3,800 students, far surpassing the record for last year, enrolled themselves in the night public schools in the District, which opened for the season last night.

In addition to the usual grade schools, night classes have been instituted at the Business High School, the McKinley and the Armstrong Manual Training School, each of which opened with an unusual attendance.

Secretary Hine, of the board of education, announced that the work of the night schools this season would be superior to that of any other year, and in some instances along different lines.

Object of the Board. It is the purpose of the board to give a practical business education to those students who will be unable to graduate from the high schools, and subjects that will enable them to fill a position without serving an apprenticeship will be taken up. In many of the schools general classes in typewriting have been formed.

There are in all about fifteen schools, employing approximately ninety teachers, the white division being under Dr. W. M. Merch, while the negro schools are under the supervision of Dr. B. Evans, his assistant.

These classes will meet on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays of each week, the white schools beginning at 7:30 o'clock and the negro schools at 8 o'clock, lasting two hours.

The board of education will endeavor to have the classes run for sixty or sixty-five nights, according to the appropriation.

Foreign Children Attend. An interesting feature of the opening was the presence of nearly 100 foreign children and adults at the Franklin and Gales schools.

In addition to the regular public night schools, the large classes at Lincicum Institute, the free night school for working men and boys of Georgetown, began its thirty-sixth session last night at 7:30 o'clock. The school has quarters of its own in O street, between Thirty-first and Thirty-second streets, and is opened every night except Saturday.

There was an enrollment of about seventy-five on the school book, which gives promise of a good season, as students usually are late in enrolling themselves. This school is maintained by a private endowment left by Edward Macgruder Lincicum, at one time a prominent hardware merchant of Georgetown.

Informal exercises marked the opening, and addresses were made by each member of the faculty, who are R. Clinton Balingier, James H. Taylor, Frank J. Wissner, Prof. Thomas Sidwell, and Walter Peter. The classes include a practical English course, but specialize in business studies, and are open to all working men and boys who wish to advance themselves.

Four Candidates Initiated. Ouray Council, No. 1890, Royal Arcanum, initiated four candidates at their regular meeting held at Pythian Temple last night. Supreme Representative Claude R. Zappone and Grand Regent H. G. Lenz were present.
